

BULLYING AND MENTAL HEALTH

Every day thousands of teens wake up afraid to go to school. Bullying is a problem that affects millions of students. Studies show that people who are abused by their peers are at risk for mental health problems, such as low self-esteem, stress, depression or anxiety. They may also think about suicide more. The best way to solve a bullying problem is to tell a trusted adult. Parents, teachers, coaches or any adult in a position of authority will find a way to stop dangerous bullying problems.

If you are feeling extremely stressed, sad, hopeless or worthless, these could be warning signs of a mental health problem. Mental health problems are real and treatable. Speak to someone you can be open with — your parents, teachers, coaches or friends — about what's on your mind, and always remember that your doctor can also help.

HEALTHY TIPS YOU NEED TO KNOW

OBESITY

Watching your weight now, with regular exercise and healthy eating, can help you avoid conditions such as diabetes and heart disease later on. Do you know your BMI?

A Body Mass

Index (BMI) is a number calculated from a person's age, weight and height and is an indicator of body fat to identify possible weight problems. It's never too late to make changes and those changes don't have to be big. Cut back on sugary beverages, don't have second helpings and get more exercise, even if it's just 5-10 minutes a day. Getting involved in team sports is a fun way to get regular exercise. By maintaining a healthy weight you will sleep better, feel better and live longer.

STDS (Sexually Transmitted Diseases)

Be sure you are taking care of your sexual health. You cannot tell if a person has an
